John Lennon

John Winston Lennon was born on October 9th 1940 in Liverpool, England. As a child, John quickly became bored with school. He didn't do well at most of his subjects and it was only with the recommendation of his headmaster that he was able to secure a place at the Liverpool Art College. The college had not heard of John Lennon the musician. He was accepted because of his drawings. It was there that he received his first guitar and taught himself to play. Rock and roll radio became his constant friend and teacher.

It was in 1957 that probably the greatest songwriting duo in history first met. John Lennon, while playing with his group, the Quarrymen, met his future collaborator, Paul McCartney. The two hit it off immediately. While Paul had more of a pop approach to music, John was able to assert his underground music tastes. The world got something it had never heard or seen before: Beatlemania.

After several earlier formations, the Beatles as we later knew them consisted of the following members: John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Star. John and Paul did almost all the songwriting and you can hear which songs were written by John and which by Paul (even though they are both listed as the authors). After conquering the world of music and becoming financially secure the Beatles started to look for new directions and inspiration. John Lennon found his in the peace movement, which was popular at the time. He also found a tremendous amount of support in his second wife, Yoko Ono, an artist from Japan. The support she gave him led to his launching his solo career and was a factor in the eventual break-up of the Beatles in 1970.

On December 8th 1980, just after leaving his apartment near New York City's Central Park, he was gunned down by a stalking fan, Mark David Chapman.
